Case

A 17 years old girl, she has been taking treatment for PCOD (CR – Calcareo Silicata) & suddenly she has developed pain in Axillary region with small lump since 3 days..... Patient is shy in nature so not ready for photograph & she sent a photo of lump but it was not clear.

No tenderness, no any discharges. I prescribed Calcareo Silicata 200 remedy. (Patient had few doses of constitutional remedy, I advised to take one dose of C R) She developed severe pain & tenderness, swelling gradually increased five times more than before, but no any discharges.

Patient's mother called me & told, "Sir, Aa su thyu??? Aatlu kem vadhi gyu??? Sir mne Darr lagto hto k Biju kai nai hoi ne, etle me mara family physician ne btavyu to tene kidhu k Incision muki ne bdhu kadhvu j padse. Su kru sir? Tena thi pain sahan nthi thato..."

I told her that don't do anything & meet me at my clinic on 6 pm. I told my assistant to take photographs but patient can't raise her hand. So with the help of her mother my assistant took photographs. Still there was no any discharges, but too much tenderness is there. (Patient can't tolerate even touch of clothes)

Patient told me, Give me Painkiller otherwise I'll go for I & D. So I assured them no need of any Incisional surgery... Tell me how do you feel??? Bov j pain thay chhe, sahan j nthi thatu. Bdhu bahar nikdi jay to pain thodu ochhu thay.

On the basis of Appearance, Pain & Tenderness; I prescribed Silica remedy in 30c × 1 hourly & Tablet Combiflam (SOS) Patient took 1 tb of Combiflam because of severe pain.

What Are LM Potencies?

LM potencies refer to the 1 in 50,000 dilution. They are notated as 0/1, 0/2 or 1/0, 2/0 or Q1, Q2, etc. in which 0 stands for the tiny poppy seed granules on which they are prepared. LM potencies are medication diluted in water and administered in a small dose, repeated as long as necessary, adequate enough for Performing a brief cure slightly altering the dynamisation before each dose, through succussions applied to the medicinal solution phial.

Assistant Professor,
Dept of Case Taking & Repertory

History of Hahnemann's LM Potencies:

On 28th July 1856, a notice appeared in the German journal Allgemeine Homöopathische Zeitung. The author conceals his identity behind the initials NE. The sensational information released to his readers, however, incensed Hahnemann's widow, Mélanie' Hervilly (1800-1878) Let us look at the actual wording: "The news that we will soon be in Possession of the writings which our master has left behind, will bring joy to the heart of any person who is penetrated by the truth of our teachings and who – as the writer of these lines – is filled with great respect for their founder. Many beautiful cases of healing are, without doubt, hidden in Hahnemann's Paris journals, which will be of the greatest service for present and future generations of homoeopaths once they have come to light. A wealth of theoretical experience can be expected from the publication of the writings of such an astute and inspired thinker and observer, whose clear mind could not even be clouded by his great age. Only in one respect Hahnemann seems to have gone somewhat too far during the last years of his life: I am alluding to his potentisation theory."

Hahnemann's case journals were, however, jealously guarded by Mélanie' Hervilly in Paris and nobody was allowed to see them apart from Hahnemann's favourite pupil Clemens Maria von Böenninghausen (1785-1864). In a still unpublished letter written in French to Böenninghausen and dated 8th September 1856, i.e. only a few weeks after publication of the above mentioned journal, she vented her anger and accused him of having disclosed confidential information to a third party. In this letter, the Q-potencies – as they are called now-were mentioned for the first time by name: Divisions infinitésimales (infinitesimal dilutions). Where other homoeopaths had failed, Böenninghausen did not succeed either, namely in convincing Mélanie to make Hahnemann's literary legacy available to the followers of his teachings.

In 1859, three years after this incident, Böenninghausen published an article on homoeopathic posology, in which he describes his positive experiences with high potencies (> C 30) and expresses his hope that Hahnemann's widow Melanie might soon publish the 6th edition of the Organon because it would include the description of a "new dynamisation method relating to high potencies more powerful than any previous preparations."

Two years later another article by Böenninghausen appeared in the same journal in which he again defends the high potencies. Hahnemann's widow Melanie, in spite of many promises never released the 6th edition. She wrote to the English Homoeopathic Association that she was willing to send it for a sum of $ 50,000. Unfortunately her request was refused and the 6th edition remained unpublished in her lifetime.

Hahnemann's Grandson Dr. Suss Hahnemann tried to publish the 6th edition but Melanie warned them not to do so threatening them with a lawsuit: "I beg to inform you that the exclusive right to said work belongs solely to me & I possess the manuscripts sixth edition of 'Organon' written by my late husband's own hand."

When Melanie died in 1878, her adopted daughter, Sophie von Boenninghausen, was given the manuscript to continue the work on it. She herself asked $25,000 but no offers were forthcoming. The manuscript remained hidden and was not discovered until after World War I. It was finally published in 1920, with the first English edition in but by the time it was published, the practice of homoeopathy was already well established based on the single centesimal dose, "wait and watch" method of 4th edition. Thus the guidelines of 6th edition were not truly put into practice until 1950 by Dr. Charles Pahud of France and then by Dr. Pierre Schmidt of Geneva in 1954.

Dr. Schmidt published a small booklet, Hidden treasures of the 6th Edition of the Organon and stated: "The main points which I wish to raise here are entirely new and somewhat revolutionary when compared with accepted notions divulged and applied in the five earlier editions of the Organon. They are barely known or not known at all by homoeopaths."

The veil of secrecy that shrouded these so called medicaments au globule or 50-Millesimal potencies was first partly lifted in 1921 by the Stuttgart homoeopath and Hahnemann-biographer Richard Haehl (1873- 1932) when he published the last hand edition of the Organon. Neither Boericke in the preface to his translation nor Haehl in the introduction to his edition refers to the significance of the new Potentisation method described in § 270 of the 6th edition for Hahnemann's therapeutic practice in the last years of his life and for homoeopathic pharmacotherapy in general.

Only in his very comprehensive Hahnemann biography the latter remarks: "Hahnemann called remedy potencies that were produced in this new way Medicaments' au globule as opposed to the Medicaments' à la goutte which were produced using an earlier system and whose potency grades he used to express in Roman numerals. For the new remedy preparations on globules he used Arabic numerals with a little ring above (1, 2, 3, 5 etc.)".

Haehl also mentions that according to Hahnemann's then still existing medicine chest these remedies were produced in ten different potencies. Which Potentisation Hahnemann preferred, when and in which cases he resorted to the controversial Q-potencies and how often he actually used them Haehl was unable to disclose. His premature death prevented him from publishing Hahnemann's case journals, which had not been published before. The credit of having rediscovered the Q-potencies for 20th and 21st century homoeopathy belongs to the above mentioned Swiss physician Dr. Rudolf Flury (1903–1977). Hahnemann writes, “what I said in the fifth edition of Organon, in a long note to this paragraph in order to prevent these undesirable reactions of the vital energy was all that the experiences I then had justified. But during the last four or five years, all these difficulties are wholly solved by my new altered but perfected method.”

The Brazilian homoeopath Ubiratan C. Adler came to the conclusion that Hahnemann, during the final six years of his life, had prescribed Q-potencies in at least 1,836 cases. Adler demonstrates three different phases during which Hahnemann experimented with Q-potencies. In the first phase (1837-1839) Hahnemann applied the new potentisation method quite rarely. He tended to use Q1, at first almost exclusively with Sulphur and Hepar sulphuris prescriptions. During the second phase (1840- 41) Hahnemann conducted comparative research into the efficacy of Q- and C-potencies. The Q-potencies ranged between Q4 and Q10, higher Q potencies are hardly ever mentioned. During the same period Hahnemann also administered C-potencies (from C4 upwards) to the same patients to be able to compare the results. During the third phase Hahnemann moved on, to prescribe Q-potencies based on the instructions he had recorded in the sixth edition of the Organon. He started with Q1 or Q2 and then went up the scale as necessary. In India, S. M. Bhattacharya of Berhampore, W Bengal, wrote an article in the March 1957 issue of Hahnemannian Gleanings “Hahnemann’s 50Millesimal scale of potency” in which he described various aspects of Millesimal scale including a comparison and contrast with CM scale, conversion table of CM scale in respect of 50M scale. He also points out the fallacy in the calculation given by Mr. Everitt in British Homoeopathic Journal (BHJ) of April, 1957.

On account of the difference between the methods of preparing the two scales with regard to the difference in succussions, the two scales cannot be converted or used one instead of another. Decreasing or increasing the number of succussions makes all the difference in the patient’s improvement. Power, control and flexibility are greatly helped by the number of succussions. Dr. R. P. Patel in ‘My Experiments with 50M scale potencies’ wrote the potencies were given from lowest to highest every day, at interval of 2 days, 4-5 days, 10 days, 15 days and 20 days. He also tried pills dry on tongue and is of the opinion that 50M potencies give equally good response if given in globule form or in liquid. But few authors are of the opinion that the first dry dose could be given in an emergency situation (in acute disease). Dry dose of higher LM potencies would cause a lot of aggravations with little benefit. This scale cannot be compared with CM scale nor should they be substituted for another because scales are different in order and cannot be interchanged.

LM1 can be taken after 30C, because it is much higher than 30C (the way Hahnemann prescribed during his Paris years). Same way, LM2 can be taken after 200C and LM3 can be taken after 1M. The main idea is that there is similarity in the constitutional factors guiding the choice of the two potency systems. If the constitutional sensitivity & vitality is such to be concerned about giving 30C, not to give LM1 normally but give LM1 in several dilutions with one or two succussions only.
